Expert Reviews:

Edmunds.com: plenty of folks are simply looking for a plush interior with room for seven, a powerful engine and a prestigious brand image. For them, the Mercedes-Benz GL-Class delivers on all counts, yet it also manages to stick out in this ostentatious segment by actually having meticulous engineering and refinement, too newCarTestDrive.com: The GL is built using unibody construction rather than the body-on-frame design that full-size pickups and SUV's traditionally use. Mercedes notes that because of this architecture, the GL-Class is 300-600 pounds lighter than its full-size competitors. To make sure the GL class is strong enough, 60 percent of the vehicle structure is made from special high-strength steel.

KBB.com: Mercedes-Benz hits all the right exterior notes. In profile, the GL is very well-proportioned, disguising its overall length (200.3 inches) with short overhangs, an aggressive windshield angle, generous greenhouse, flared wheel arches (similar to the S-Class) and careful detailing.

ConsumerReports.org: The ride is firm but comfortable with good isolation and steady, restrained body motions. The interior is peaceful with very low noise levels. Body lean is controlled and it makes the GL feel agile for such a large vehicle. The steering is responsive, with good feedback. On our track, the GL was balanced and predictable, with well-tuned stability control.
